

“We want employees to be well prepared for their jobs and give them the tools to be better at them. SumTotal’s solutions are a huge component in making sure we get them the information that they need at the point of work.”

Anna Suckow, Good Samaritan Society Learning Technology Supervisor

Business Challenge

The Evangelical Lutheran Good Samaritan Society is the largest not-for-profit provider of senior care and services in the U.S. It serves more than 27,000 people in 240 locations nationwide. The organization has 24,000 employees who work in 24 different states.

The Good Samaritan Society has always placed an emphasis on training, but struggled to determine the best way to deliver that training when and where employees need it. As a highly regulated, compliance-driven organization, the Society consistently needs to demonstrate what training employees had and when.

How SumTotal® Helped

The organization selected SumTotal Learn: Enterprise and initially rolled it out with a focus on tracking. This gave them valuable insights into employee training compliance and development.

Once the organization got the basics covered, they looked for ways to improve training delivery. They deployed a library of online courses to their communities on a subscription basis so locations could choose to use the library of content to meet training needs. To deliver a user experience that reflected the company’s highly relationship- and mission-oriented culture, the organization used SumTotal’s customized news pages.

Key Metrics

305K 305,000 courses completed online – about 840 courses completed per day.

1m Over 1 million online courses have been completed in the learning management system (LMS).

150 150 locations subscribing, exceeding goals by more than 5 times
